

What is the Matrix?

👤 sixie6e 📅 June 3, 2020 ✎ Edit

Humans have created a reality on top of actual reality. Our species doesn't have to experience the elements and can acquire what they perceive as 'wealth'. This manufactured reality is what the Matrix is. Different flavors of vehicle, mass production of animals, mass consumption of about ~60% of edible food while the other ~40% is trashed. Some humans throw out a whole banana for a bruise on it. Some humans won't eat the ends of a loaf of bread. They will eat each other's butts though. They'll put toxic chemicals in their body to feel better short term rather than change their diet/behavior long term. Instant gratification again. The corporate construct. The pyramid scheme called 'economy'. The invisible chains that bind us mentally to a non-sustainable, violent, depraved existence when it does not have to be this way, Humans have to have to have to have. Humans need to want to need to want. A cycle of perpetual suffer exploited by corporate executives. A dollar as incentive is a shit idea for a society unless you have a head start. Make humans think they can achieve something impossible or that they have the same opportunities as others. A large number of other debt slaves are willing to buy a product with their wages, thereby making it marketable for corporations and a select few get wealthy. They do negative labor. They could not physically provide what they use/enjoy daily if they worked all day every day for the rest of their lives.

it is 'voluntary' labor but an ultimatum is not a choice. if you don't participate in the system, you do not thrive.

The slave learns to love their slavery over time, after it becoming acceptable. If it is tolerable then is that better than going against social standards and norms? To have the attention on you for society to gang up on? If you look at society's face, its image, it appears grand, magnificent, the future. If you look at it's belly it is disgusting, writhing, and depraved. The image has to be perfect. Everything is industry. It is getting to where even our nature is manufactured.

The American dream. People are asleep, reality is shit. They kept telling cipher he couldn't return to the Matrix. You can, if you get Dementia or Alzheimer's or a brain injury. You can't unlearn the things that you have come to know as truth. 'truth', 'woke', and terms of that nature have taken the internet by storm in a society where symbolism is more important than substance. They become overused, watered down, and worst of all – when used by someone who believes in Jesus or flat earth for example – now others who say they are 'woke' or sharing 'truth' look like they also believe those ridiculous things and are going to push them. So now when someone says they are 'woke' it's like great, more of those fad followers that also think tea leaves tell their future or that the stars determine their personality. Neither the stars or cosmos is not responsible for your shit behavior (replace L and G with N and M, then you get an actual science #astronomy).

It is you. You and other humans are all responsible for both yours and their behavior. Habitual, addicted consumers. Justifying their addictions in irrational ways like all addicts do. Hoarders. Not 'junk' of course. Only a houseful of shit used once or twice, if at all. If you recall, the boy said, 'there is no spoon'. Everyone knows what a spoon is but to each individual a spoon is different. That object is only a spoon because we call it that. Words and language construct our realities.
